Dear Nathan,

Complaints handling satisfaction

In July, we published the results of our survey on passenger satisfaction with train operators' complaints handling. This showed low levels of passenger satisfaction with South Western Railway's complaints handling arrangements. The purpose of this letter is to ask you to set out your plan to make improvements in this area.

Complaint handling survey

As you are aware, ORR commissions this large-scale survey with passengers who have made a recent complaint to a train operator. The survey measures the passenger's satisfaction across a range of indicators related to the relevant operator's complaint handling process and subsequent outcome. We share the survey results with train operators quarterly to provide them with the opportunity to analyse their own performance and to identify areas driving dissatisfaction in order to make the necessary improvements.

The headline results for 2019/20 were published in our Annual Rail Consumer Report¹ and on our data portal². This showed that of the nearly 3,000 South Western Railway complainants surveyed; only 24% were satisfied with the complaint handling process. This score is below the national weighted average for all operators³ and indicates that South Western Railway's complaint handling arrangements are currently falling short of what we, and your passengers, expect.

Complaints handling

Good complaint handling not only builds passenger trust, but also generates essential management information that operators can use to identify systemic or recurring problems to be corrected. In turn, that helps build a culture of continuous improvement geared to meeting the evolving needs and expectations of passengers.

Therefore, I shall be grateful if you will set out how you have used the survey results to understand the drivers of dissatisfaction in your complaints handling process, and the steps South Western Railway has taken, or has planned, to make the necessary improvements.

Next steps
